Description

A moving tribute: "The Studio Easel" by Paul Delvaux, born on September 23, 1897 in Anthain (Belgium) and died on July 20, 1994 in Furnes, a celebrated Belgian painter, engraver and illustrator of the Post-Impressionist movement, the one who leads us into poetic and dreamlike worlds. At the beginning of the 20th century, Paul Delvaux became the inspiration for the ungrateful Surrealists, who turned their backs on him as early as 1928 following his shift towards an Expressionist movement. He was the fifth disciple of René Magritte, the greatest of the modern Belgian painters (1898-1967). He has his own rich museum in Belgium and numerous works in museums and private collections; a great painter who is significant in the evolution of 20th-century modern painting. This immense decorative easel, bearing the marks of its past through the imprint of its colors, is a marvel of craftsmanship and sturdiness. Capable of accommodating enormous canvases, it is mobile on its efficient casters and has two sides for displaying two works simultaneously. Its powerful crank allows for adjusting its height to over four meters. It is iconic and the most faithful companion of this famous painter, and thanks to time and its transmission, it can proudly grace your home if your ceiling is as high as your appreciation for this exceptional piece. Its brief history will be provided to the buyer.
