Description

Pair Of Lacquered Nightstands of the early 1900s of an unusual type, with a central drawer and an openable top. The box shape is softened by the mouldings near the supports, the gilded frame in the middle part and the top overhang; nevertheless the bedside tables' particularity lies in the faux stone decoration and in the faux planks masterfully decorated within white frames. In a good state of preservation apart from minor faults as documented in the gallery pictures, these antique bedside tables, marbled in shades of green, date from the early decades of the 1900s and come from the Marche region. An antique lacquered bedside table is a piece of furniture that combines the charm of the antique with the practicality and elegance of a lacquered piece of furniture. Made of fir wood, these antique lacquered bedside tables have a semi-glossy wax finish that lends a touch of class and refinement to the room in which they are placed. They can be used next to the bed to place personal items or as decorative elements in different rooms of the house. Thanks to the quality of the decoration and its vintage tone, the antique lacquered bedside table can enhance any type of furniture, from classic to contemporary, giving a warm and welcoming atmosphere to the room.
