Description

Ink and wash drawing - Village of La Garde in the Var - 18th century. This remarkable brown ink and wash drawing depicts a picturesque view of the perched village of La Garde in the Var. The anonymous artist has skillfully captured the atmosphere of this fortified village, dominated by its castle which stands majestically atop a rocky promontory. The drawing, which can be dated to the eighteenth century, testifies to the interest of artists of this period in topographical representation and views of fortified sites. The composition is skillfully orchestrated with a mountainous background suggested by subtle washes, while the village occupies the center of the representation, its houses and fortifications rendered with precision. In the foreground, a man and his son enliven the scene and provide a sense
