Description

This portrait of a woman, a work from an 18th-century French school, is the presumed portrait of Françoise Martin de Champoléon, born around 1705. Daughter of Pierre, Lord of Champoléon, she married François de Manuel, Lord of Locatel (1649-c. 1716), in 1690. An old label on the back of the painting mentions her genealogy. She is depicted here in three-quarter profile, richly dressed in a high lace bustier with a ruffled collar and a belt at the bust, highlighting her neck adorned with a pearl necklace and her largely bare shoulders. The right sleeve of her black coat, decorated with a teardrop brooch worn halfway up her arm, powerfully fills the oval of the portrait. As a young woman, she has a mischievous and playful air that shines through in her deep gaze and the hint of a smile on her lips.
