Description

Gilt brass ecclesiastical crown, France, 19th century. Adjustable liturgical ornament set with colored glass stones. Dimensions: diameter 15 cm (max), 13 cm (min), height 8 cm. Evoking the solemnity of sacred rites and the splendor of 19th-century religious pageantry, this gilt brass ecclesiastical crown embodies a spiritual majesty imbued with refinement. With its harmonious curves, it unfolds an adjustable circular structure, designed to adapt to ceremonial uses, while maintaining a strong sculptural presence. The main band, finely chiseled with scrolls and stylized plant motifs, holds a collection of artfully arranged glass stones: a central emerald green cabochon dominates the composition, flanked by red, white, and green gems, evoking liturgical colors and the symbols of the Trinity. translucent stones underlines the base, capturing the light with an almost mystical delicacy. A testament to devotional craftsmanship, this rare piece combines the nobility of its materials with decorative virtuosity. It could have adorned the head of a choirboy during grand processions or enhanced the relics on an altar. Today, it stands as a precious fragment of sacred history, at the crossroads of folk art and ecclesiastical heritage. In very good condition, please note some glass missing but this does not detracts at all.
