Description

A flat, double-sided Empire-style writing desk, crafted from mahogany, opens at the front with a wide central drawer retaining its original lock. The rectangular top is covered in green leather, finely framed with a gilt border, lending the piece a restrained and refined distinction. The subtly molded apron rests on console legs, typical of the Empire style, providing both stability and visual balance. The lines are clean and architectural, devoid of decorative excess, perfectly illustrating the neoclassical aesthetic of the early 19th century, where the quality of proportions and the nobility of the wood take precedence over ornamentation. Features: Period: Empire, early 19th century Wood: mahogany Top: antique green leather with gilt frame Opening: a central drawer opening onto a second concealed writing
