Description

Still life depicting a garland of grapes, tied at both ends with satin ribbons. This motif, characteristic of Dutch painting of the 17th century, is frequently found in decorative compositions of the period, notably through the delicately rendered bows. However, judging by its execution and overall spirit, this painting appears to date rather from the 18th century and may be of French origin. The quality of execution is remarkable. The painting has been relined and is in good overall condition. It is currently set in a modern frame. Highly decorative, this work would be further enhanced if presented in a period frame or one inspired by the era.
