Description

An elegant five-panel screen, dating from the late 19th century, crafted in the Louis XV style. Each panel is painted with an oil on canvas, displaying a rich Rococo-inspired decoration. The upper portion of each panel is decorated with gallant scenes and love scenes in an 18th-century style, while the lower sections are adorned with floral motifs, garlands, trophies, and musical instruments, all framed by refined polychrome fillets and ornaments. The panels are currently detached, as the original hinges are missing, allowing for either restoration as a screen or use as decorative wall panels. A fine piece of decorative work, typical of late 19th-century historicist production, ideal for elegant interior decoration, a shop window display, or a classic design project.
