Description

Exceptional painting from the 17th-century Spanish school of Antequera. Oil on canvas, original to the period and later mounted on canvas, with a keyed frame dating from the 19th century. Presented in a 19th-century gilt frame with minor losses. It is signed in a cartouche in the shape of a scroll, José Robledo, and dated 1690. There is a small dent without a hole on the right (nothing serious, visible in the photos which also serve as a description of the painting). I can send more detailed photos as well. A thorough study was carried out by Professor Fernandes Lopes, a Spanish specialist in this type of religious painting from the School of Antequera and Seville (see the last three photos).. This study has revealed a great deal of artistic interest and a better understanding of the Antequera school, as the specialist explains. (The painting was examined in person by this specialist, not through photographs.) An estimate of EUR9,500 to EUR10,000 has been set for this canvas, which resurfaced in 2019 and had apparently been forgotten for centuries in a presbytery attic in France. The discovery of this painting enriches the artist's inventory, as detailed in the specialist's report. You will notice the richness and precision of the decorations, specific to this style of painting and to José Robledo. This painting is intended for true connoisseurs of 17th-century religious paintings. Dimensions of the painting without the frame: 65.5 x 54 cm. Price: EUR6,500.
