Description

This piece asserts itself as an autonomous form, conceived as a work of art in its own right. It does not belong to ornament or adornment, but functions as a sculptural presence, designed to engage directly with the body and space.The composition embraces a dense and controlled visual language. Volume, structure, and color are treated as independent artistic elements, without compromise or decorative intent. Every component contributes to a deliberate, powerful, and fully assumed form.Here, jewelry transcends its traditional role to become an artistic gesture. It does not complement a silhouette -- it defines it. It does not follow trends -- it asserts a position.It stands alone as a major work of art, carried by a futuristic vision.
