Description

A richly carved, solid wood display cabinet dating from the 17th century. The front is adorned with a central molded and carved panel, highlighted by geometric designs and scrolls. The turned columns on either side provide a striking verticality and a distinctly architectural character. The cabinet opens with a door fitted with its lock and key, offering practical storage space. It rests on ball feet, typical of furniture from this period. The patina is deep and warm, highlighting the wood grain and the craftsmanship. This piece is ideal as a small sideboard, occasional table, or entryway cabinet, equally suited to a classic interior or a more contemporary setting seeking a statement piece.
