Description

Early 20th-century English charger plate in Patent Ironstone China, featuring a vivid yellow ground with a stylised exotic bird and floral decoration. The surface is enriched through hand enamelling and gilding applied over transfer printing, resulting in a visually strong and decorative object. The moulded scalloped rim with gilt edging gives the plate a pronounced presence, characteristic of Edwardian presentation wares, circa 1915.

The design draws on late Victorian Mason's patterns influenced by Japanese art, illustrating how Orientalist motifs were adapted for European decorative ceramics. Intended as a decorative object rather than functional tableware, this charger works particularly well as a standalone display piece.
