Description

An 18-karat champagne gold ring (a shade between yellow and rose gold), openwork and set with six brilliant-cut diamonds and three synthetic rubies. Synthetic rubies, first produced in the early 20th century using the Verneuil process, experienced a surge in popularity during the Art Deco period. Their vibrant color and purity made them a highly prized material for jewelers. In the 1920s and 1930s, they were widely used to create geometric patterns emblematic of the Art Deco style. French work from the 1930s/1940s, eagle's head hallmark. Dimensions - Weight: 7.8 grams. Finger size: 54 (resizing available for an additional fee). Length of the top part: 2 centimeters. Width of the top part: 1.43 centimeters. Width of the bottom part: 5.2 millimeters. Thickness of the top part: 7.1
