Description

A splendid and elegant pair of candlesticks, entirely made of wood, with fine pastiglia stucco decoration, rich in classical-style festoons and cherub heads carved in low and high relief, adorning the rich scrolls on the lion-footed base. The candlesticks are believed to be Roman-made in the early 17th century and feature a coat of arms with a heraldic element belonging to an important family of medieval origins, the Counts Guidi of Romena, who ruled for centuries between Tuscany and Emilia-Romagna. The candlesticks originate from an important palace in central Rome. They measure 170 cm in height and approximately 60 cm in width. The candlesticks have undergone restoration to consolidate the original gilding, which was preserved intact. Minor losses and damage have
