Description

Educational display panel with cultured pearls and mollusk valves, 20th century

An interesting educational display panel, composed of a carved wooden frame decorated with stylized motifs, containing a selection of mollusk valves and cultured pearls mounted on a light-colored fabric background.

The display illustrates the different stages of pearl formation, as indicated by the original English labels ("Cultured Pearl," "1 month old," "6 months old") accompanying the various specimens. Small spherical pearls, shell sections, and open valves illustrate the pearl's progressive growth within the mollusk.

An object of considerable historical and scientific interest, likely intended for educational, museum, or demonstration purposes, today appreciated as a
