Description

A figurative plaster sculpture, dating from the 1950s, depicting a nude female figure partially draped in a coat. The work is distinguished by its expressive style, deliberately simplified volumes, and highly textured surface, revealing traces of modeling and a decidedly modern approach. The pose, both stable and dynamic, gives the figure a strong sculptural presence. The contrast between the nudity of the body and the coat draped over the shoulders creates an intimate yet sculptural dimension, characteristic of post-war statuary. The sculpture is signed "Paolini" on the base, attesting to its artistic origin, likely from a workshop or personal production rather than a purely decorative piece. Artist: Paolini (signature on the base) Period: 1950s Material: Plaster Subject: Nude woman with coat Condition: Good
