Description

A Charles X period rosewood sideboard, of fine craftsmanship, dating from the early 19th century. This piece is distinguished by its clean, balanced lines and the richness of its grain, carefully enhanced by a warm finish. The front features four doors opening onto ample storage space, complemented by several drawers in the frieze, offering excellent storage capacity. The doors are highlighted with decorative stringing and small brass elements, adding a refined touch without being excessive. The uprights and frames display meticulous workmanship, typical of quality furniture from this period. The thick, well-preserved top allows for both decorative and functional use (dining room, living room, library, or entryway). The interior is clean and sound, with sturdy shelves. Dimensions: Height: 107 cm
