Description

Oil on panel depicting a portrait of a young woman, her bust drawn, arms raised behind her head, in a pose that is both free and introspective. The model, rendered with gentleness and restraint, stands out against a dark background enlivened by stylized touches of color, lending depth and vibrancy to the composition. The brushwork is fine and controlled, with delicately applied paint. The composition is centered on the female figure, whose assertive pose contrasts with the melancholic expression on her face. A figurative work from the first half of the 20th century, at the crossroads of realism and a more modern sensibility. The whole exudes a strong and elegant presence. Signed lower right, partially legible, unidentified. Presented in its molded wooden frame with a patinated green and
