Description

Cartier, the great jewelry house, here reconnects with its oriental and Chinese inspirations from the 1920s Art Deco period. Thus, this ring named "Kiss of the Dragon" "Yijing" is totally representative of this inspiration: its name: the dragon, a fantastic animal, symbol of wisdom, power and luck, is particularly revered in China, while the Yijing, or Yi King, is an ancient Chinese text; the materials that compose the ring are just as representative: jade, particularly prized in China, here in the form of a large black cabochon, whose effect visually evokes Chinese black lacquer; the geometric, rectilinear lines, here in white gold pavé-set with diamonds, take their inspiration from the aesthetics of the porticoes of ancient Chinese temples. The openwork design of this ring creates an undeniably graphic effect, also incorporating elements of Art Deco pieces. This ring, crafted in 18k white gold (750/°°, eagle's head hallmark), dates from the 2000s. It is a striking and impactful piece, a reminder of Cartier's status as a leading house during the Art Deco era and its enduring avant-garde spirit. The smooth surface of the jade creates a mirror-like effect, reflecting its surroundings: therefore, the effects of light, shadow, and other visible patterns are merely reflections.
