

Pair Of Meiji Period Japanese Bronze Quail Attributed To Maruki Co

2 245 EUR

Period : 19th century

Condition : Bon état

Material : Bronze

Description

A fine quality pair of Meiji period Japanese bronze quail, one standing and looking to the left, the other preening its feathers, attributed to Maruki Co, late 19th century, standing on a wood base, apparently unmarked. Measurements: Height: Preening quail (excluding base): 10 cm (4 in) Standing quail (excluding base): 8.5 cm (3.3 in) Length of base: 29 cm (11.4 in) Depth of base: 11.5 cm (4.5 in) Condition: One issue found. The left leg of the preening quail has a break, only visible when the bird is gently rocked. If the bird was removed from the base, this could be easily restored. No other issues found. Shipping/Import: Free to most destinations. EU customers, PLEASE NOTE: Our price for this item includes all shipping and import costs (customs duty, clearance fees, and

Dealer

Lefays

Fine, affordable, art and antiques with excellent customer service

Mobile : +44 7772174440

Hare Lane,

Chard TA20

VAT). For other destinations, please inquire. Notes: The Maruki workshop, based in Sukiya Street, Nihonbashi ward, in Tokyo, produced fine quality bronzes and carvings during the Meiji period, exhibiting both domestically and internationally. References: See Christies, Auction 21922 Three Private Collections: Belgravia, Berkshire and Guernsey, 25 May 2023, lot 180.