Description

Elegant patinated bronze sculpture dating from the late 19th century, depicting a putto standing upright and supporting above his head a lidded container, likely intended for decorative or functional use (bonbonnière, perfume holder, pot-pourri or similar). The work stands out for the high quality of its casting, the careful execution of anatomical and decorative details, and the presence of a well-preserved original dark patina. The classically inspired subject is enriched with vegetal elements and a softly flowing drapery that lends movement and elegance to the composition. The upper container, harmoniously integrated into the figure, features a decorated lid, stylistically and materially consistent with the rest of the sculpture. The circular base provides stability and balance to the overall form. A highly
