Description

Sarah Bernhardt at Home, circa 1896. A rare photograph depicting Sarah Bernhardt in her home, taken around 1896 by Paul Nadar, a major figure in Parisian photography at the end of the 19th century. Son of the renowned Félix Nadar, Paul Nadar distinguished himself with his portraits of artists, writers, and leading figures of the Belle Époque's cultural scene. The composition shows Sarah Bernhardt in an intimate and refined setting, surrounded by personal belongings, draperies, and furniture characteristic of her world. The pose, natural and poised, reveals the tragedienne's full personality: elegance, authority, and a keen sense of staging. This photograph belongs to a series of portraits Nadar took in the privacy of his subjects, far from the strict confines of the studio. This image
