Description

A powerful testimony of Italian realism between the 19th and early 20th centuries. This compelling painting depicts a nude man at work, executed in oil on paper later mounted on canvas, and can be dated to the late 19th-early 20th century (Italy, 1880-1900). The artwork immediately stands out for its strong expressive power and the almost introspective attention given to the human figure, rendered with remarkable pictorial sensitivity. The pale complexion of the body, contrasted with the sun-tanned face and hands, clearly suggests a man accustomed to hard outdoor labor. This detail, far from incidental, conveys a story of daily life, effort, and dignity, making the scene deeply human and authentic. Furthermore, the natural pose and accurate anatomical rendering reveal the artist's solid
