Description

Description These two framed oil paintings, are presented as a cohesive pair and share a consistent painterly language marked by confident brushwork and strong color structure. One work depicts a moored fishing boat rendered in turquoise, green, and warm ochre tones, with expressive strokes suggesting movement and light within a harbor setting. The second painting presents a seated figure composed through broad planes of color, where reds, blues, greens, and neutrals are balanced to define form rather than detail. In both works, the artists favors simplified shapes, visible brush marks, and a modern, post-impressionist approach that emphasizes mood and composition over realism.
