Description

A Bakhtiar family rug with a cruciform design. This antique rug measures 136 cm wide x 200 cm long and is in good condition. There is slight surface wear on the short pile. It features a geometric design typical of its period and very fresh and bright colors for its age, circa 1950. This rug originates from the Shotour region of Iran, Persia. It is a piece with a square or rectangular cross-shaped structure extending across the entire field, comprising fifteen medallions. This design depicts large flowers and leaves, as well as trees of life, set in a field and bordered by a thin, highly elaborate border of stylized flowers. This rug, in fact, is particularly well-crafted and represents a transition between nomadic and urban rugs in the precision of its execution. These rugs are durable and thick, knotted with very high-quality wool from the mountains. It will withstand the footsteps of an entire family for many years to come. The pile is short and hand-knotted. Despite their name, and unlike other types of rugs, Bakhtiar rugs are not knotted by members of the Bakhtiari tribe, but by a different, now settled, population. The Shotour region produces Bakhtiar rugs, but also the lesser-known Yalame rugs, which resemble our model in shape but have straight polygons.

Yalame rugs are more recent in production but enjoy a very good reputation. Short fringes, restored and in very good condition, edges in very good condition. Condition: bright and clean velvet with slight wear from use. We feature many Bakhtiar rugs on Proantic, all very different, reflecting the diversity of designs for this type of rug. This piece has been professionally and ecologically cleaned.
