Description

Nomadic oriental rug, probably Beluch, woven by the Baluch tribes settled between eastern Iran and western Afghanistan.

The piece features a cotton warp and a hand-knotted wool pile, in keeping with the artisanal tradition preserved within pastoral communities. The central field, organized around a strictly symmetrical vertical axis, is enlivened by stylized geometric and floral motifs. These elements are often interpreted as evocations of fertility, protection, and cosmic harmony. The border is structured by a sequence of repeating motifs.

Proposed dating: circa 1920.

Condition: good overall condition, wear consistent with age.
