Description

An elegant pair of oil paintings on canvas depicting bouquets of flowers in a wooded landscape. Each composition features an abundance of blooms--peonies, roses, lilies, and carnations--arranged in stone baskets or vases, on mossy ground or at the edge of a wood, bathed in soft, muted light. The pair is distinguished by its pictorial quality: the precise drawing, the subtle modeling of the petals, the refined color harmonies, and above all, the integration of the bouquet into a landscape background, in a highly theatrical staging typical of the second half of the 18th century. These works belong to the decorative tradition initiated by Jean-Baptiste Oudry (1686-1755), famous for his ornamental floral compositions intended for overdoors or wood paneling. Their style clearly evokes the work of his workshop or circle, particularly in the way they depict nature with majesty, yet without excess. The canvases are presented in giltwood frames, decorated with pearls and heart-shaped motifs, perfectly in harmony with the decorative and noble character of the whole. France, late 18th/early 19th century. Some signs of wear.
