Janet, whom he married in 1949, created ephemeral decorations for the windows of major fashion houses from the 1940s onwards, notably Balenciaga, Dior, Hubert de Givenchy, Pierre Balmain, Ricci, and Hermès, and participated in the design of the sets and costumes for Jean Cocteau's The Testament of Orpheus, filmed in 1959. In 1996, fifty paintings by Jean-Claude Janet were exhibited in Paris with sculptures by Janine Janet, Étienne Martin, and François Stahly.
