Description

A lively tavern scene, attributable to the Flemish school, depicting a working-class interior where an elderly woman appears to be introducing a young woman to a young man, observed by several figures gathered in a convivial tavern atmosphere. The composition, rich in expressions and exchanged glances, evokes social customs and daily life, with traditional costumes and a warm palette typical of genre painting. Oil on canvas, 19th century, presented in its original giltwood frame. Note: minor damage
