Description

A rosewood display cabinet, its upper section composed of two glazed doors adorned with delicate carved scrolls and fitted with a working lock and key. The whole is crowned by a molded cornice highlighted by an elegant gadrooned frieze. The projecting lower section of this two-part cabinet conceals an ingenious sliding compartment above, revealing a writing surface lined with new black leather, enhanced with a gilt vignette and a refined central motif. On either side, slender balusters frame this space, and at the back are three small drawers and a spacious storage niche. Finally, two solid doors, each with a lock, reveal three wide sliding drawers when opened. This piece, with its compact dimensions and meticulous craftsmanship, is as appealing for its functionality as for the beauty of its rosewood
