Description

Large Impressionist painting with Japanese influences from the late 19th century. A painting full of sensitivity, set in a sumptuous floral and peacock feather motif, depicts an elegantly dressed woman in a floral dressing gown, half-open at the shoulder to reveal a bare breast. A figure in a kilono is positioned to one side. The influence of Japanese art on Western artists became evident from the late 19th century onwards with Impressionism. It became a new source of inspiration and sparked great interest among artists who discovered a new type of painting, as seen in Monet's paintings of his wife. Dressed in a kimono in 1876, Pissarro said: "Japanese artists confirm my visual art; the numerous paintings by Gustav Klimt, Alfred Stevens (The Japanese Parisian, 1872), Van Gogh
