workshop. At the dawn of the 18th century, Thomas Hache developed a special sawing process to obtain large sheets of burl wood, as well as red and green dyes for sycamore and ash, the secret of which is now lost. Using burls and roots as iridescent and shimmering as precious fabrics, Pierre Hache, cabinetmaker to the Duke of Orléans, created marquetry decorations in the Louis XV style whose refined taste and originality remain unsurpassed. His son, Jean-François, further enriched them, sometimes adding a touch of virtuosity to the forms. The fruit of a century of production, the known work of the Hache family is impressively extensive and varied. The abundance of furniture falsely attributed to them is no less so.
