Art Museum of Romania in Bucharest, the Philadelphia Museum of Art in the USA, and the Tate Gallery in London. For Paul Neagu, art is an expression of "desire in the face of systems that try to inhibit it," as he wrote; and desire involves "the re-establishment" of what he variously calls "the hyphen," "the summary," and "the gamma," all of which imply "materiality," particularly conveyed by "the figurative essence of sculptures, paintings, and drawings." Neagu's works, regardless of the medium, are full of desire, as their visceral energy suggests. --Donald Kuspit
