Description

Rare and evocative object of Mexican folk devotion, consisting of a carved wooden support in the shape of a shoe, entirely decorated with hand-applied metal milagros. It features a beautiful antique patina, visible both on the wooden support and on the metal elements. Milagros are small traditional ex-votos, widespread in Mexico since the colonial period: devotional offerings left in gratitude or as a request for protection, healing, or divine intercession.

Hearts, body parts, symbols, and figures are applied to crosses, specific shapes, panels, or sacred images, transforming the object into a true map of faith, lived experience, and hope. Each milagro tells a story of a wish, a grace received or invoked, making these artifacts deeply personal and unique.

In this case, the shoe shape takes on a strongly symbolic value: it represents the journey, protection along the path, and the desire for return, progress, or salvation. Objects of this type were often offered to ask for protection during travel, migration, or important transitions in life.
