Description

Elegant taxidermy of a weasel (Mustela nivalis), dynamically posed on a branch and mounted on a wooden base. The composition balances the alert and agile nature of this small mustelid, known for its extraordinary speed and adaptability. The weasel is one of Europe's smallest carnivores, but also one of the most efficient: a silent predator, it can move with extreme agility between branches, rocks, and burrows. Traditionally associated with cunning and agility, it has been a fixture in European natural history collections and cabinets of curiosities for centuries. This work comes from the Netherlands and was created in compliance with current regulations: the species is not subject to the CITES Convention.
