Description

A striking Italian coffee table in glass and marble, dating from the 1970s, emblematic of the modernist and architectural aesthetic of that period. The rectangular, thick glass top rests on a sculptural composition of four marble legs with clean, geometric forms, alternating cylindrical and conical volumes. The marble, with its subtly contrasting natural veins, lends a strong mineral presence, while the transparency of the glass lightens the overall effect and elegantly highlights the structure. This table perfectly illustrates the dialogue sought in 1970s Italian design between noble materials, minimalist lines, and balanced massing. Both understated and sophisticated, it belongs to the lineage of creations influenced by the modernist movement and radical Italian architecture. A sculptural piece as much as a
