Description

Here is a kneeling court lady in gray terracotta, most likely from the Han dynasty. It is antique and retains its original patina. It has not undergone any restoration; it is in its natural state, having only carried out a basic cleaning. We note some rubbing and signs of wear to the material and decoration, a possible loss near the hands, and small losses in various places, all visible in the photos. The piece remains, however, in good condition. For a complete description of its condition, please examine the photos carefully. The photos are an integral part of the description.
