This exquisite netsuke, carved from ivory and measuring 2.8 cm in height, dates from the late Edo period (19th century). It depicts two young boys, or karako, captured in a moment of spontaneous play. Despite its small size, the piece impresses with its meticulous detail, particularly the traditional motifs incised on their clothing. The base bears an artist's signature beside a finely carved fan. It is a precious example of Japanese miniature craftsmanship, combining an authentic patina with great technical mastery.
