Description

This bronze statue is a replica of a famous sculptural group entitled The Horses of Marly, based on the work of Guillaume Coustou. It depicts a groom attempting to subdue a rearing horse, capturing all the tension and power of the scene. The originals, commissioned by Louis XV, were intended for the Marly-le-Roi estate and are now on display at the Louvre. This version appears faithful to the original with meticulous details, notably the dynamic posture of the horse and the taut musculature of the groom.
