Description

This superb carnelian agate sculpture, dating from the 1950s, is a refined testament to mid-20th-century craftsmanship. It depicts two young women in traditional dress, whose graceful figures and delicate faces reflect the classical aesthetic of the era. The stone is distinguished by its exceptional translucency and natural gradations ranging from a luminous amber to a deep orange-red. Every detail, from the flowing robes to the finely carved flowers, reveals remarkable technical mastery. It rests on its original hand-carved wooden base.
