Description

Rare four-light candelabra. Gothic wrought iron: circa 1450. The single piece of iron, worked by the craftsman, forms an elegant central shaft that splits into two volutes, each holding a candle holder without a dagger-shaped finial. The circular base, which serves as the candle holder for the entire piece, rests on three skate-shaped feet. It holds two candle holders identical to those on the upper section (perpendicular to them). A small hole is located on this base.
