Description

Large Rococo Carved, Polychrome and Giltwood Ornament

France, 18th century

This elegant carved wooden ornament dates from the 18th century and is likely of French origin.

Executed in polychromed and gilded wood, it presents an arched composition richly carved with scrolls, volutes and foliage, fully characteristic of the Rococo decorative vocabulary.

The sculptural work displays a fine sense of movement and a fluid treatment of volumes, revealing expressive and meticulous carving. The original polychromy, combined with the original gold leaf gilding, retains a warm and authentic patina. Areas of wear, rubbing and minor repairs are entirely consistent with the age of the piece and contribute to its charm and historical integrity.

The reverse, left unfinished, shows traces of former fixings and assembly, attesting to its original function. It was likely conceived as an architectural or decorative element, such as a panel, pediment, crosspiece, or crowning feature for furniture or interior architecture.

Today, this ornament can be displayed as a decorative object in its own right. It may be hung on the wall, integrated into a wall composition, or highlighted above a door, mirror or passageway, where it will bring character, depth and a strong sense of presence to an interior.
