Description

Patinated iron openwork or outdoor table display in the late 19th century. A return to the 19th century for your table. Created in the 19th century, this iron compotier is inspired by the neo-classical of the end of the century. Its openwork shape and the edge turned like a rosette is a beautiful metaphor for the future movement that will occur in 1890 until 1910: the Art Nouveau movement, whose main characteristics are the theme of nature and organic forms inspired by it. In very good general condition, it can go inside as well as outside, the inner center of this compotier is slightly weathered by use and time, which contributes to its charm & authenticity.
