Description

Black lacquered riding helmet, Japan, 19th century (Edo period - early Meiji). This bajo jingasa, a light helmet for samurai riders, illustrates the martial arts and symbolism of late Edo period Japan, a time marked by the transition to the Meiji era. Its domed shape with a raised visor, characteristic of equestrian jingasa, combines partial protection with freedom of movement. It is entirely covered in glossy black lacquer and decorated on the exterior with gold-painted mon (?): a stylized cross inscribed within a circle, repeated regularly. The rim is highlighted with a gold line. The interior is lacquered bright red and retains its original textile padding. A two-character signature is visible under the crown. Analysis of the gold-painted mon identifies it as belonging to the Moriya clan,
