

Coquemar, Glazed Pottery, 17th Century

490 EUR

Description

Glazed pottery known as "coquemar," Beauvaisis, 17th century. Glazed in green on white clay, which turns pink when fired, this cooking pot has a classic, well-balanced shape. It is spherical with a thickened rim featuring three raised bands. A thumb handle with a buttress attached to the base of the body. Three added solid feet ensure stability in the hearth. A similar piece is reproduced in G.H. Rivière's "Art Populaire de France." In very good condition, this pottery is representative of the utilitarian glazed earthenware of this period. Width including handle: 25.5 cm.

Period : 17th century
