Description

Early 19th Century Neo-Renaissance Stone Male Head. This architectural stone mascarón head, in the Renaissance/Neo-Renaissance style, is mounted on a contemporary metal base. The bearded male face, with deep curls and strong features, is reminiscent of river gods or philosophers depicted on ancient facades. It boasts a beautiful surface patina, with wear and irregularities consistent with its former outdoor use. This sculpted piece is ideal as a curiosity, displayed on a console table, desk, or in a bookcase. A unique object that instantly adds character to a classic, wabi-sabi, or cabinet of curiosities décor. Discover all our other products on our website: www.lantiquites.com
