Description

Oil on panel. Titled, dated, and signed on the back. Under the amber light of the old bistros and taverns on the outskirts of Paris, the accordions resonate like the melancholic and indomitable pulse of old Europe. In this suburban setting, the chromatic accordion and the banjo intertwine in a vibrant dialogue, dictating the rhythm of waltzes, polkas, and javas that transform the gray asphalt into a dance floor of bohemian and popular elegance. These dances were not merely entertainment, but a refuge of shared identity where the joy of celebration was tinged with that typically French nostalgia, evoking a time when street music had the power to halt the course of modernity and celebrate, amidst smoke and wine, the truth of humble neighborhoods. Image dimensions without frame: 90 x 70 cm / 104 x 84
