Description

Description This grouped set of 19th century hand-thrown terracotta vessels by an unknown maker comprises seven utilitarian earthenware forms produced for domestic use. The collection includes bowls and storage jars with incised decoration, loop handles, and visible wheel-thrown construction, reflecting traditional craft methods. Natural clay tones range from pale buff to deep brown, with areas of slip, glaze pooling, and surface wear consistent with age and use. For scale, the largest pot positioned at the back on the left measures approximately 35 cm high and 25 cm wide. Artist Details The works are representative of regional European pottery traditions focused on functional household wares. Characteristics include hand-thrown construction, practical forms, and minimal decorative
