Description

We are pleased to present this series of two oil paintings on board. The painting style suggests an early 20th-century Italian painter; the paintings have red initials at the bottom left, but the artist's name has not been identified. These are two splendid landscapes of the Italian countryside in a flat area with mountains in the background (likely the Po Valley in northern Italy). Both paintings feature green fields and gnarled, almost leafless trees in the foreground, while in the background are small country villages with low, white buildings and red roofs. The painterly quality is evident, a realistic style with bold, visible brushstrokes that almost give shape to the trees, the meadow, and the rest of the landscape. The artist perfectly captures the natural light and atmosphere of the Italian countryside, which
