Description

Antique copper and brass diving helmet, dating from the early 20th century, an authentic nautical artifact from the world of underwater and port work. This antique helmet boasts a homogeneous, unrestored original patina, highly sought after in industrial decor. It features a circular front porthole, a cross-shaped side porthole, and an antique threaded air intake fitting, all characteristic of continental productions of this period. The original breastplate is missing, a common occurrence for this type of antique piece, but this does not detract from its decorative and aesthetic appeal. An authentic, unassembled object, it offers a strong visual presence, ideal for loft decor, a cabinet of curiosities, a gallery display, or a contemporary interior with an industrial feel.
